

Contact Sales:

1-800-405-0844

Does my company subscribe?

Newsletter sign-up

Search bar with magnifying glass icon and placeholder text 'Se...'

Log in →

Become a Client

- Industries ▾
- Products ▾
- Insights
- Events
- Pricing
- About ▾

Hispanic consumers remain an underserved demographic for many marketers

Article by Jeremy Goldman and Daniel Konstantinovic | Sep 25, 2021

A note on language: The terms ‘Hispanic’ and ‘Latino’/‘Latinx’ mean different things. ‘Hispanic’ refers to someone from a Spanish-speaking country or with a background in a Spanish-speaking country.

speaking country; ‘Latino’/‘Latinx’ or someone who hails from a Latin American country or has roots in one. For the rest of this article, ‘Hispanic’ refers to be otherwise specified.

This September marks the 53rd anniversary of Hispanic Heritage Month, but are brands and retailers, and media entities reaching this important demographic year-round? Acknowledging the different aspects of Hispanic identity? The data points from a number of areas.

Advertising: Despite making up 18% of the total US population, Hispanic consumers represent up a disproportionately small proportion of overall advertising spend.

Only 6% of overall industry investment is directed toward the Hispanic community, per the Hispanic Marketing Council.

Film: Popular movies still marginalize Black and Latinx people.

The USC Annenberg Inclusion Initiative found that despite accounting for 15% of office tickets sold, just 7% of leading

Already have a subscription? Sign In

Access All Charts and Data

- ✓ Learn about what technologies are transforming your industry
- ✓ Gain exclusive perspectives from top industry leaders
- ✓ Access thousands of data sets and forecasts via our iconic charts

Become a Client

SHARE

TOPICS

HISPANIC

CONSUMER ATTITUDES ON MARKETING

BUSINESS STRATEGIES & TRENDS

UNITED STATES

filled by Hispanic/Latinx actors in 2023, the highest percentage in any year for which data exists.

Just 5% of 51,158 characters across popular films surveyed were Hispanic/Latinx, and 43.6% of the films studied did not feature a single Hispanic/Latinx character.

While some industries spend too little on courting Hispanic and Latinx consumers, others may be spending too much time courting a demographic group.

Fast food: A report from the University of Connecticut's Rudd Center for Food Policy and Obesity found that fast food ads target Black and Hispanic communities.

Fast food ads on Spanish-language TV increased 33% between 2012 and 2022, and ads viewed by children increased 45%.

Hispanic Americans are at higher risk for chronic conditions like diabetes and obesity. A report from The Brookings Institution found that Hispanic women over the age of 40 have an obesity rate of 49%, and Hispanic men 18 and up have the highest risk of obesity at 14%.

READ NEXT

RELATED CHARTS & ANALYSIS

Taking the time to understand what's important to this demographic is key to marketing to Hispanic consumers. While it's impossible to do that justice in 700 words, a few highlights:

Identity: Hispanic identity is much more diverse than the media portrays.

ADVERTISEMENT

Ebook: Discover Our Secrets to Data Storytelling

With an overload of data a fingertips, the challenge lies making it accessible and a Whether you're a seasoned or a beginner in the realm

A quarter of US Hispanics identify as Afro-Latino according to Pew Research, but they and indigenous Latinos are “left out of the celebration” of Hispanic Heritage Month according to Angel Jones, an Afro-Latina assistant professor of education at Southern Illinois University - Edwardsville.

Furthermore, Latinos are more likely to celebrate events and holidays that are specific to their culture, rather than a general event like

Hispanic Heritage Month, said Ed Morales, author of the book “Latinx: The New Force in Politics and Culture.”

Language: Over 70% prefer speaking Spanish at home, according to Instituto Cervantes in 2020.

Many brands rely on the fact that many of their Spanish-speaking consumers are bilingual, and rather than offer services in Spanish, rely on English only.

While this approach may keep costs down, it doesn't necessarily provide the best user experience.

Brand activism and loyalty: Hispanic Americans are especially aware of social issues, and feel strongly that they should be able to trust the brands they purchase from.

A report from Edelman Trust Barometer found that Hispanics feel they can influence change more strongly with their wallets than with their votes than other demographics: 54% felt that they can better influence social issues through the brands they buy than with who they vote for.

Hispanic Americans also put their values in high priority when selecting and working with employers, and brands that align themselves with the values and issues that affect Hispanic communities are likely to find success.

The big takeaway: Brands have an opportunity with Hispanic consumers—a big one. A more detailed understanding of this critical demographic is key to better serving them and reaping the benefits.

Want more marketing insights?

Sign up for EMARKETER Daily, our free newsletter.

Business Email

Sign up

- California Resident
- I agree to the terms of service and privacy policy.

By clicking "Sign Up", you agree to receive emails from EMARKETER (e.g. FYIs, partner content, webinars, and other offers) and accept our Terms of Service and Privacy Policy. You can opt-out at any time.